Sir:

Applicant agrees with the Examiner that the combination of claim limitations as a whole are patently distinguishable over the cited prior art when each claim is interpreted in its entirety.

Applicant further agrees with the Examiner's statement on page 6 that the computer-readable storage medium is limited to non-transitory media, and does not encompass transitory media. However, Applicant respectfully disagrees with the statement on pages 5-6 that "[t]he Specification (after Examiner amendment above) limits the computer readable storage medium to floppy disk, hard disk, EEPROM, and CD-ROM ...."

While the Examiner is correct that the computer-readable storage medium does not include any transitory medium types, the specification is illustrative and not restrictive. Hence, the term "computer-readable storage medium" can cover non-transitory media types other than a
